

Working with a Spirited Child

A Spirited Child...

Likes to perform

Is intelligent

Is demanding

Needs less sleep

Has a high energy level

Is extra sensitive & easily over-stimulated

Finds it difficult to adapt or change

Is emotionally intense

Dealing Effectively With a Spirited Child...

Provide daily quality time. By spending special time with your spirited child, this establishes a trust that you will always be there.

Keep him or her informed. When you explain to a child what he or she should expect, it defuses the child's anxiety.

Be consistent. High-spirited children need rules, so once you set them, stick to them.

Anticipate. If a high-spirited child acts up in certain circumstances, make other arrangements.

Offer praise. Positive reinforcement encourages good behavior.

Let the child help when possible. It may take a few extra minutes or become a little messy, but will save you from tantrums and battles.

Avoid labels. Be careful how you describe the child – instead of “Tommy is so stubborn and mischievous,” try “Tommy is so confident and energetic.”